Reader Involvement Required!

At a commuter college like Mat-Su, many of the students here spend hours driving from one campus to another. I know that I myself sit in my car heading to or from Anchorage 5 or 6 hours a week, something that is usually just a waste of time. Occasionally, however, something happens to spice up the drive and I’m sure that many of you have similar experiences. One time we saw more than 45 cars in the ditch and people were still driving like maniacs! Although that is a slightly tragic thing, it did make the drive less boring. You have a better one though, I’m sure. And we want to hear it! Send in your most interesting/funniest/most infuriating experience from the drive to or from Anchorage and we will publish the best ones in the next issue of the Monitor!

For reader responses to last issue’s question: What was your worst Christmas gift?

Get up and Slam, It’s Time for Cram Jam!

By Ryan Johnathan McCrossin

It’s 9:00 AM. I walk into the lobby and head towards the cafe in my winter coat. I step in and realize I am the only student there at that time. I went up to Dr. Allen and said hello. She was happy to see me and told me to pick a table and start working. If I needed any help, please be sure to talk to her or anybody else here. Sounds good. There’s a table full of Chez Mix, mini bags of chips, sandwiches in the back for further in the day, and soda and water over by the microwave. I grab a water and some Chez Mix, take out my textbook and start working.

When I told my friend I would be on campus today (October 20, a Saturday), he just looked at me funny. I could tell what he was thinking, “Why would you ever go to school on a Saturday?” I told him it was because I was going to be one of the two Math Cram Jams this semester. He turned towards me and stared, “You’re gone Monday–Thursday already, you’re going to be gone another day? You’re stretching yourself too thin, Ryan. You know what happened in high school, Ryan. You know how you missed graduation practice because of your AP exam, Ryan. You know what this is going to do to you, Ryan.” But then I realized dogs cannot talk and I am imagining things.

10:30 AM. Someone gets the idea to make coffee. I am excited. There is already an

Mat-Su College accepting their first inaugural cohort of CNA students

By Adelina Rodriguez

Mat-Su College will be accepting their inaugural cohort of Certified Nurse Aide (CNA) students for spring 2019. Students who successfully complete the 6-credit hour course, HCA A105 Certified Nurse Aide, will be prepared to sit for the State of Alaska Licensing Exam. The cohort will be limited to ten students with the goal to increase enrollment to 20 students in future semesters to meet employment demands. With the emergence of two senior care centers in the Mat-Su Valley, a need for health-care professionals, including CNAs, is vital to the welfare of our community.

Sandy Gravely, Director of Student Services states, “When another person’s well-being is on the line, knowing what to do and how to do it takes on a new meaning. My mom had to be hospitalized last spring after a fall. Helping her get well really opened my eyes to the importance of CNAs. She depended on their

Fighting Opioid Abuse at a Community Level

By Miles Gibson

During 2017 about 142 Alaskan residents died from drug or alcohol overdoses. Of those 142 deaths, 108 were attributed to opioid use. While the rest of America is in the midst of an opioid epidemic, here in the Mat-Su Valley, a group made up of a wide range of community members is trying to help people towards recovery.

Michael Carson, Vice President and Recovery Specialist of MyHouse in Wasilla, leads the Mat-Su Opioid Task Force. The Task Force’s goal is to connect community members that are suffering from opioid abuse to supportive systems of partners, agencies, and individuals. The goal is to help them become healthy, self-sufficient, and productive members of our community. I attended a meeting of the Task Force to learn more about their work. This is what I learned.

Meetings are held on the 1st Tuesday of every month at 4-6pm in the Wasilla High School theater. As a member of the music and counter-culture I was interested in what it meant to fight a drug within one’s community. As a product of Reaganomics, I went into this meeting on a mind full of hash, weed and handfuls of drugs I could find in the old medicine cabinet. I was expecting

Monitor Staff Bios

In this issue of the Monitor we introduce new staff biographies. Over the course of the year, we hope to introduce you to all our contributors.

Sam Ouellette
Editor and Sports Guru

Sam has been with the Monitor for six years as a contributing writer and editor for the past four years. Sam recently attained his Associate's in Human Services through Mat-Su College and is continuing his academic career in pursuit of a Bachelor's in Social Work. When he is not working on academics, Sam enjoys reading, playing hockey, skiing, and spending time with his family.

Mesa Burgstahler

Mesa is a writer for the Monitor. As an art major and international traveler, she doesn't really enjoy writing that much but does enough for the paper that she can hang out and enjoy socializing at the meetings. (They haven't kicked me out yet, knock on wood...)

Heather Deadmond

A full-time student at UAA/Mat-Su pursuing an Art major, with a History minor. She has given up on submitting articles for the Monitor on time, but seems to gets away with it somehow. (This is probably because she is one of the student workers in the Alvin S. Okeson Library, and cannot escape when Ms. Badger and Mr. Muer remind her of impending deadlines.)

Heather also is an alumnus of the Disney College Program, a fact that she cannot resist inserting in nearly every conversation. (She highly recommends it, if anyone wants to know.) She enjoys art time with friends, dodging responsibilities, cozy sweaters that are bordering on wearable blankets, drinking tea from oversized mugs, and napping to escape the homework that eventually catches up to her anyway.

Board Game Buyers’ Guide

By James McIlmail

With the holiday season coming up, board games are most likely going to end up on most people's radar. Whether given as a gift, or pulled out to entertain, board game season is among us. So here are eight board game selections for you to consider bringing to the table this winter.

Dr. Eureka

Robert Fraga

Tired of being stuck playing children's games as simple as Chutes and Ladders? Dr. Eureka presents a game that is as engaging for parents, as it is for children.

Each player takes on the role of a lab assistant helping Dr. Eureka mix and match chemicals. The way each assigning chemist mixes chemicals is by passing colored molecules between their set of three test tubes, in an attempt to match the current card in play.

Dr. Eureka provides an excellent balance of motor skills and problem solving for both parents and children.

Tumble!

Bruce Shadof

We all know the best part of Jenga is when the tower of blocks come crashing down. The problem with Jenga is once the tower falls, the fun is over. Tumble fills that void.

Players take turns rolling a die to determine how they must place a wooden block onto the currently standing tower. If during your turn you knock down pieces from the tower, you get to collect the fallen pieces. After the last piece is placed, the player with the least number of blocks collect is declared the winner.

Sushi Go Party!

Phil Walker-Harding

Cute, quick, and surprisingly complex, Sushi Go Party! is a great introduction to card drafting games. Sushi Go Party! expands on the base game of Sushi Go! by adding the option to change what dishes are on the menu each game.

Everyone starts the round with a hand of cards, each with the most adorable cartoon sushi on it. Each turn, every player chooses one card to keep from their hand by placing it in front of them. And much like a conveyor belt sushi restaurant, everyone passes their hand of cards to the player on the left. This process of picking cards and passing continues until every hand of cards is empty. Everyone counts up the points they've earned, and the process happens twice more, until a victor prevails.

Ticket to Ride

Alan R. Moon

No matter your opinion on the game, Monopoly will inevitably show up to the table when someone plans a family game night. While Monopoly is undeniably an iconic board game, Ticket to Ride has poised itself to overtake Monopoly as the definitive family game where players compete for buying property.

Every game, players start with a handful of ticket that they must complete for points. Each ticket has two US or Canadian cities that must be connected together by your railroad system. These locations are unique to your card, and only you know where you're going. Everyone is working towards their own separate goals, while unintentionally getting in the way of the other players plans.

Santorini

Klaus-Jürgen Wrede

Undoubtedly one of my favorite classic board games, Carcassonne task players with completing tasks across southern France.

Players take turns drawing and laying tiles down to fit onto the current landscape, and assigning Meeples to roads and other structures with the goal of seeing points upon the structures’ completion. Be careful to use your Meeples thoughtfully, though, or you may find yourself stuck with an enormous city with no way to finish.

Codenames

Vlaada Chvátil

Espionage has never involved so few words. In Codenames two teams of spies each compete to identify their corresponding friendly spies. The catch is that only one member of each team knows who’s who.

Turns start with the spymaster giving out a one word clue with a number, “Animal-3” for example. That spymaster’s teammates then must figure out which three cards relate to animal. The tricky part is not choosing cards that may accidently help the opposing team. The First team to identify all of their friendly spies wins.

Reframing Colonialism
Conference: Call for Papers

The effects of colonialism continuously shape the way we all live our everyday lives, making it one of the most challenging subjects in academia. Reframing colonialism opens conversations about indigeneity, decolonization, and critiquing colonial frameworks in our disciplines. The University of Alaska, Anchorage English Studies Department welcomes all scholars to help reframe colonialism at the Pacific Rim English Studies Conference on April 20th and 21st, 2019.

We welcome paper, panel, poster, and art submission for presentation at the conference. Some potential topics include:

- How are Indigenous communities revitalizing and engaging with decolonization?
- How has colonialism impacted various Indigenous languages around the world?
- In what ways can we see Indigenous cultures responding to the effects of colonialism?
- In what ways can we see connections between religion and colonialism?
- How has colonialism been challenged in literature, writing, rhetoric, linguistics, journalism, language studies, cultural studies, Indigenous studies, history, the arts, theatre and dance?
- How has colonialism affected animal populations around the globe?
- How has colonialism affected the relationship between Indigenous cultures and animals?
- When, where, how has colonialism affected locations?
- How have cultures and/or individuals navigated intersectionality between the dominant western society and an Indigenous one?
- How have colonialism related fields and feel that it is important to address such crossroads, especially on such a topic as colonialism.

We are currently accepting proposals for:
- Paper Presentations
- Panel Presentations
- Round Table Discussions
- Poster Presentations
- Art Gallery
- Creative Readings

HEATHER’S TOP 8 REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SEE AN ADVISOR, OR “WHY ADVISORS ARE THE BEST!”

1. They know the system. Even if you don’t think you need an advisor because you can look at DegreeWorks yourself, an advisor knows the “ins and outs” of the UA system and can help you make a schedule that is best for you! I speak from recent personal experience; I could not have known how different course numbers (CRNs) counted for toward my degree, so I needed an advisor to help me translate all of the numbers and course descriptions to get to what I really needed.

2. Advisors have connections. They know people who know people, so advisors can help you connect with professors and other professionals in whatever subject you may be interested in!

3. There are different types of advisors for different things. Here at the Mat-Su College, we have general advisors, career advisors, financial aid advisors, and others! You’re guaranteed to get different perspectives and ideas depending on which type you go to. Stop by Student Services for more information!

4. Advisors can help you brainstorm. If you’re thinking you might want to take a class but you’re not sure what you would use it for or if you would enjoy it, your advisors can help you sort out these questions and find a good class to fit your needs

5. They get to know you. Especially being on a smaller campus as we are, if you’ve been here long enough, you’re hopefully familiar with many of the advisors on campus. If you make an effort to meet with them regularly as you go through your college career, they know what you’ve done and what you’ve enjoyed. This makes them able to help you even more in future classes.

6. They help you stay on track. This is probably one of the most helpful things about meeting with an advisor regularly: They keep you from going off your degree track and make sure each class you are taking is going to count for the right credits later.

7. Advisors are aware of extracurriculars. Have you been thinking about an internship or a study-abroad opportunity? Chances are, you’re not the only one, and seeing an advisor can help you connect with the right people. (And also, they know which paperwork to fill out, or can point you to someone who will.)

8. They are a major support. I’m sure you’ve grasped the importance of meeting with your advisor regularly through this Top 8, but in the end, it’s one of the best things you could do for yourself and your college experience. Advisors are there to support you and advise you to be able to have the best college experience you can have!

WHAT WERE YOUR WORST CHRISTMAS PRESENTS?

Here are a few of the replies we received to last issues’ installment of READER INVOLVEMENT REQUIRED:

- I once got a cat sweater for a gift. Not a sweater with a cat on it, a sweater for a cat. And I didn’t have a cat.
- I was a pre-teen, dying for a princess phone in my room. My dad gave me a charm bracelet with a charm that looked like the phone. He thought it was hilarious. I, not so much. (Most of you probably never heard of a princess line phone.)
- Socks and underwear.
- One Christmas my grandma gave me underwear that was gigantic!
- A bed--I wanted a stereo.
- A vacuum cleaner.
- A puppy. My dad forgot to poke holes in the box.
- A used gift card. Or maybe it was empty.
- Someone once gave me a used beach towel along with some cheap rings from a box of cupcakes. We were ten at the time, but still!
- My mother-in-law bought me a maternity dress shortly after I found out I was expecting her first grandchild. It looked like an enormous, rose-covered tent. I disliked floral prints, especially roses, and was also horrified that she thought I would ever get that big. (I am a small-boned person and was 110 lbs at the time.)

abundance of snacks and soda, so coffee will also be a great addition. I put on some music on my phone. I continue working on implicit differentiation. I feel like a need. I realize I am one, and that I should not be ashamed for being one. Because math is cool, and math is fun. I would honestly drop everything else to do math, because I love it that much.

I honestly wish more students knew about this resource.

Pre-Algebra to Calculus III. I honestly wish more students knew about this resource. I am really glad I am here.

1:00 PM. I am still in the cafeteria. I am on my fifth Diet Pepsi. There were still seven left in the 12-pack. I made it about ⅓ through the homework I had to do. About one hour until I am done. I turn towards my paper; it's Rolle's Theorem. I shed a tear. I think about getting up for my sixth Diet Pepsi but realize I will only be delaying the inevitable. “Okay, let's do this,” I finish the problem. Wait, why did I write that 14+14=26? I look at the time. “I've been here for three hours,” I hear myself say. I was there for five. I was starting to feel the fatigue of five hours of Calculus. It was almost time to go, but not before I finish this homework.

2:00 PM. I am in the car on the way home. I accomplished what I had arrived to do. I ate some good food, I hung out with my fellow classmates in the cafeteria, and look forward to the deserved nap when I get back home. All joking aside, I really enjoyed attending the Cram Jam. It was great working at the cafeteria, and look forward to helping students like me. This resource-center/index.cshtm

04 HOW TO GET A STUDENT WORKER JOB

By Monitoring Staff

Let’s be frank: your odds of finding a student worker job are not great. But those odds are zero if you don’t even know how to look for one.

Usually, a couple of student worker positions open up each semester. You have two ways of finding out about these positions.

First, watch the many bulletin boards around campus. Student worker positions will usually be advertised through flyers posted to these boards.

A Gentleman’s Guide to Love and Murder
By Shane O’Quinn

The play “A Gentleman’s Guide to Love and Murder” is a story about a man named Monty Navarro, and his upward ascension in the D’Ysquith hierarchy. In short, Navarro’s mother was a D’Ysquith, but because she married a man the family didn’t approve of, she and her family were ousted; this barred Monty from any of the D’Ysquith inheritance. Without spoiling much, the narrative details the incredibly intelligent Monty Navarro and his creativity in picking off the D’Ysquith family members. I’m not particularly fond of musicals, usually. However, this rendition of “A Gentleman’s Guide to Love and Murder” at the Glenn Massay Theater changed that fact. The entire show I was glued to the stage, captivated. The show was a healthy balance between comical humor and compelling drama. However, I can not point to any single aspect of the show and attribute what was best about it. The cast delivered an extremely engaging performance, and the supporting crew did an incredible job controlling the stage and changing scenes. The factors that most likely influenced me as part of the audience were the set, sound track, vocals, and acting. Firstly, the set pieces were cleverly constructed in such a way that they offered the suspension of disbelief and clarity, really allowed for a seamless transition between different scenes and environments. Second, the supporting sound tracks was instrumental (pun intended) in helping to deliver an amazing show; as the vocals picked up, so did the sound track. It should also be noted that the different sound tracks for each of the scenes really aided in setting them apart. And lastly, the acting and vocals were phenomenal. The cast transition from regular dialogue to vocals effortlessly, it seemed. I loved hearing each character’s unique accents and seeing their personalities come to fruition. In short, it would be a mistake to miss out on future shows put on at the theater; you may be pleasantly surprised at what you find.

Drunkmas to Drunkmas: Coming Home for the Holidays, Bremerscum Style
By Miles Gibson

Local Spenard favorites Sasshole and Dante Manalo are ending their upcoming tour in Alaska. Across the state at various bars and house shows, Sasshole and Dante are bringing much needed, musical light to the darkest days of winter, culminating in Drunkmas 3, December 21st, in Fairbanks, Alaska. Bringing a little bit of honky-punk and roots music to cosmically funky space jams, and a bit of everything in-between, while still resounding Alaskan in spirit and tone.

Playing at Van’s dive bar, Ferry Alaska, and other stops along the way, Dante and Sasshole are bringing All Funk to the holiday season. If you’re not 21, check out AK house shows on Face book to check out where they will be playing in Wasilla and Palmer. Sasshole, aka Nessa, is a born and bred Alaska and a regular face at the many music festivals of the Alaskan summer. This will be her third annual Drunkmas, the Brain child of Nessa and unofficial “anti-Christmas” Christmas. It’s a simple idea that has turned into something bigger–a show organized by bands and didn’t even realize. He’s played with Anchorage bands more (maybe you can contribute something we haven’t even thought of)!

That totally nails it, too.

What makes Drunkmas such a good show is that you feel like part of the band that night. It’s a show “that is for the people playing, and it’s like our Christmas party,” Nessa explained. And it really is—a show organized by bands across the state and now even the country. It’s the office party for the local musicians that scatter to the wind after the snow flies. The energy on stage is reminiscent of old timey Christmas specials. Instead of slick suits and martinis, you get Carhartt’s and beers. “It’s like a Christmas for the strays that got nowhere to go, and just rage a bit,” Nessa said.

That totally nails it, too. With all the extra stimulus of the holidays (add to that finals, nightmare airports, and insane shopping), we can all benefit from blowing a little bit of steam off. You can tell that the musicians are doing just that, carrying on with the crowd like they are old friends, and in a way, they are. If this is a band office party, then the bands are management and the crowd is the little guy working in the mail room, or answering phones. “It really is a lot about support; without support, we can’t do our art,” expressed Dante.

So, this holiday season get out there and support each other, or support Dante and Sasshole, or rage out and drink beer, all of which are equally acceptable to Sasshole and Dante. “Just make sure you bring plenty of gum so you don’t have to kick any ass,” suggests Dante.

Drunkmas will be the best one yet. It’s a show "that is for the people playing, and it’s like our Christmas party," Nessa explained. 8 Influential and Important Albums of 2018 (get it because 8)

By Ryan Johnathan McCrossin

2018 is coming (awfully close) to an end. Music this year has been great, one of the better years in the decade, in my opinion. As it does, every music list is coming out with the top albums of the year! So, like the sheepil that I am, I will follow suit. But because music is subjective, and not every album I list is going to be critically acclaimed by all who read this, I want to talk about ten albums that not only did I personally love, but albums that made an impact, for better or worse, in 2018. There were ups, and there were downs. There were even some “kamikaze’s”. So this is my list of 8 albums of note in this year.

Note: This list cuts off on October 31, 2018 due to the newspaper being released before year-end. So, when the inevitable LITERAL BEST ALBUM OF 2018 comes out the day after the due date for this article, just know that I held off for as long as I could!

JPEGMafia - Veteran [January 19] [Hip-Hop/Rap]

2018 was a great year for hip-hop and rap. Honestly, many times that there were other releases in different genres. But with this album coming out so early and setting a precedent, no wonder music people like me think this. JPEGMafia's sophomore release after his debut “Black Ben Carson” continued his themes of anti-police brutality, anti-hate, and pro-bangers. Almost all of these songs have amazing performances behind them; Peggy’s usage of samples from video games add a layer behind his music, and songs like “1539 Na Calypso” will hype anybody up. This album also contains songs of a sardonic nature with “Liberat Anthem” and “I Cannot Fing Wait Until Morrissey Dies.” I am really excited for his next release.

Death Grips - Year of the Snitch [June 22] [Experimental Hip-Hop]

STOP ROLLING YOUR EYES AT ME. Death Grips is a meme, yes, I am aware. But they are great. I would argue that Death Grips is one of the most influential bands of the decade. I was originally going to put “Government Plates” on my Halloween list last issue, but decided against it to get a general feel to my list and just say obscure albums. I haven’t gotten any death threats, so I shall now tell you why “Year of the Snitch” is great. Andy Morin’s electronic workings, Zach Hill’s erratic percussion, and Stefan Burnett (MC Ride)’s abrasive vocals join together to create amazing album after amazing album. “Black Paint”, “Disappointed,” “Linda’s In Custody” -- you name the song’s good. Except “Little Richard.” “Little Richard” is the only bad song. If anyone from Death Grips Snitchposting is reading this, anyone who disagrees with me that that song is the worst on their discography is objectively wrong. We’re not just talking opinion, your opinion is actually wrong.

Blood Orange - Negro Swan [August 24] [R&B]

I almost don’t want to talk about Devonte Hynes’ latest LP. It’s an experience. It’s like telling you the middle of a story. So, here is what I will tell you. It is a fantastic album and is one of the best releases of the year. “Jewelry” was my introduction to the artist, and it has led me down a great path. The album is 49:27 and should be listened to actively. This is not an album to digest in the background; your mind should wander while this is playing and nothing else in the world would mind if it didn’t matter for an hour. Enjoy.

Eminem - Kamikaze [August 31] [Rap]

It is at this point where the list goes from greatest of 2018 to where it becomes about importance of albums. This is also where I get the hate mail, but here goes. Music as a medium to spread a message is powerful. With this in mind, Eminem’s Kamikaze has proven to be, while at the very least better than Recovery (which is not saying a whole lot), a poor reflection of Marshall Mathers’ character. People are ragging on him not because of his talent, but because he decided to use this medium to call out modern rappers for being “bad.” This is the epitome of “Look at me, I can do a rap better than other people.” This is real life, not Scary Movie 3. But I mean, how can you hate him with classic lines such as “Tyler [from The Creator] create nothing. I see why you called yourself a f bitch. It’s not just ‘cause you lack attention. It’s ‘cause you worship D12’s *es, you’re sac-rilegious.” “Fall,” which is where this song came from and had a music video, essentially nosedived Eminem’s credibility as a rapper because he has shown that he will throw a tantrum over any criticism he gets over his albums. People praise this album because he is “telling it like it is,” but realistically this song and this album are less like roasting other rappers, and more like telling your girlfriend horribly mean things about her because you are upset with her. But like he said, he’s “going for the jugular.” Ironically, he kamikazed so hard, I actually forgot this album existed until today, so there’s that. Music can be powerful, but that can be turned against you very easily. And that is important.

Kero Kero Bonito - Time ‘n’ Place [October 1] [Pop (kind of, maybe you know what, I’ll just say pop)]

Fans of Kero Kero Bonito were pleasantly surprised with the announcement that they not only have been signed to Polyvinyl Records, but they have a second album in the works. “Time ‘n’ Place” is a slight departure from their predominantly upbeat debut “Bonito Generation” touching on more dark topics such as anxiety, death of a loved one, not knowing what life has for you in the future, and many off-putting themes.

Okay, I know the “dark topics” may not seem like much, but there is a more personalized feel to Sarah Bonito’s vocals and Gus Lobban & James Buller’s instrumentals on this album. Let me also say that this is a very drastic change from the same band that wrote songs such as “First Time,” which is about turning pink from eating too much shrimp and “Break,” which is about taking time out of your day to relax. There is a more immense sense of self-reflection; not everything is great, but you should still be optimistic in life and realize while sometimes life won’t go your way, it will one day.

Machine Girl - The Ugly Art [October 12] [Experimental + Hardcore]

NO MORE MUSHY STUFF! WE’RE GOING ALL CAPS FOR THIS BECAUSE THIS IS MACHINE GIRL, BABY! AW YEAH!

Machine Girl is honestly one of the best underground acts of this decade. WLFGRL is one of my favorite albums of all time, so when he announced the album literally twelve hours before the release, I went to sleep ready to buy my first cassette tape from him, maybe even get the limited edition. Listening to fantastic songs like “A Song Called Cleve Barker,” “Neer Culture Vulture,” and “Decent Man” would be great to have on a physical copy. But turns out it wasn’t limited like his previous releases. I’m fine. No really, I am fine. I AM FINE. BECAUSE THAT MEANS YOU, YES YOU READING THIS, CAN ALSO OWN THIS TAPE AS WELL. AWESOME, YEAH! GET THE ALBUM!

BONUS: 5 Disc/Honorable Mentions

These are releases for one reason or another didn’t make their way on the main list, whether it be because it is a reissue (like an actual reissue not like Twin Fantasy above), I spoke about it already, or whatever. But I will still mention briefly on these albums here.

Kanye West - Yandhi {November 23} (provided it ever comes out) [Hip-Hop/Rap]

On October 25, performer Clayton Raithel came to the Glenn Massay Theater to do a one-man show called SMILE. SMILE is Raithel’s frank account of his own experience with severe depression and his gradual recovery. This makes the show sound like a real downer. It wasn’t. Raithel is actually an accomplished comedian, and humor -- adult humor at that -- was the foundation of his show. After a good hour of laughs, Raithel fielded questions from the audience, many of whom said that they could relate to what Mr. Raithel had experienced. Others said they gained a new understanding of depression.

Winona Benson of Nourished Health Coaching Services once again led one of her popular Farm to Table Journey events. At the September 28 workshop, students learned to make healthy, homemade macaroni and cheese. Many enthusiastic students showed up -- even though it was a Friday morning.

Greta Van Fleet - Anthem of the Peaceful Army
[October 19] [Led Zeppelin]
I discussed this album in the prior issue of the Monitor which you should read cough cough. But this album was definitely one of my favorites for the year and fans of NIN’s old stuff should definitely give this a listen.

Cherubs - Short of Popular
[October] [Noise Rock]
"Carjack Fairy" is one of their best songs. Also, their cover of Blondie’s “Dreaming” is one of the best covers ever. In addition, their outtake of their song “The Big Groovy” on this album titled “Zip-Up Boots” is a fantastic reworking. This is the Pisces Iscariot of Noise Rock. But where is Chrome Can? Where are the three minutes of outro where it connects to the intro “Pixie Stix?” #bringbackchromeancanandendofbacon-fat. Fight me.

Thirty Seconds to Mars - America

Is Shakespeare Still Relevant?

By Michelle Sharpe

This year will mark the 67th anniversary of L.A. ’s Bloody Christmas. For those readers that don ’t know, Bloody Christmas was the name given to the wrongful arrest and savage beating of 7 civilians at a police party, of which all but 2 were minorities, and all from economically challenged neighborhoods. Oh yeah, there was also a cover up that wasn’t investigated until after much lobbying by the Mexican community of L.A., which eventually lead to the indictment of over 50 officers, though only one received jail time. With still a disproportion- ate amount of police violence towards minorities today, it seems the more Christmas changes, the more it stays the same.

Maybe something non-denomina- tional is more your fancy. Got a beef with someone? Has it been festering all year? A "Festivus for the Rest of Us" might be right up your alley. Decorations include a pole -- that’s it, a pole. Traditions include the Feast of Festivus, wherein which the airing of grievances takes place. This is the chance for everyone at the table to tell each other how they disappointed each other throughout the year. After the grievances are aired, the feats of strengths commence. This is where the head of the house of the feast wrestles challengers until pinned on the back. This allows the what I like to call liquid snow, also known as rain. Lots and lots of rain! The temperature drops to about 78 degrees Fahrenheit—that might not be cold to those who are living in a place where it gets to below zero sometimes, but here on the island that’s cold enough. You will see locals wearing sweaters, sweats, and lots people wearing slippers (flip-flops) with socks.

There is a never ending covering of beautiful gray clouds that bring that lovely liquid snow we love so much. According to The US Climate Data, during the month of December, Hawaii receives about 3.23 inches of rain. You might think, “what! That’s all!” HAHA—for an average of 15 days straight. Yeah, I bet you thought that wasn’t a lot, so you started to plan your vacation right then and there—well, the joke’s on you. Try living in Kanoehe, where, according to Current Results: Weather and Science facts, we get the highest amount of rainfall, which is 6.3 inches. Thank you, lovely Ko’olau Mountain range, for squeezing the juices out of those clouds.

Despite the “cold” weather, the liquid snow, and the winds that really make going to the beach out of the question, we have the Honolulu City Lights, from December 1 - January 8, 3am - 1pm. A place with more Christmas light than you could ever imagine. If you have ever seen the 2006 Deck the Halls Movie where he lights his house packed, and starting at 4pm, the Keiki get to right ponies, play games, and win souvenir prizes.

Then at 6pm we have the tree lighting ceremony; this is where you should picture the Grinch movie, where all of Whoville gather around and watch their giant tree being lit. This isn’t as exciting as the Electric Light Parade, which is the main event of the whole evening. You have businesses, schools, non-profit organizations, clubs, hospitals, etc. from around the whole island in this parade. There are school bands marching, dancers dancing, and everyone is having a jolly good time. Candy is thrown to people sitting and standing along the street. It gets so crowded there that you have to come an hour or two before the parade starts to save a good spot for the family to get a front row seat to it all.

Don’t come to Hawaii during the winter if you’re looking to get away from the rain, the clouds, and the wind. Come for the City Lights because the locals have been waiting all year for this event, and we will be waiting a whole ‘nother year for it to happen again. It’s one of the many events that screams island love, as the parade is our way of showing the love–the Aloha–we have for our communities. Any other day wouldn’t matter but at 6pm on December 1, you best believe people will remember their zip codes and their schools.

Alternative Holidays

Well, the holiday season is upon us once again. For students this means cramped over-crowded travel and wrapping up the fall semester. Sometimes there just isn’t enough time to truly get in the season. Well, good thing ol’ Ripkin has some fun and clever alternatives for you this holiday season.

Is Christmas just making you feel crotchy? Well, remember that it can always get worse. This Christmas, instead of snuggling up with loved ones like “A Christmas Story” or “Home Alone”, why not pour yourself a stiff drink and flip on L.A. Confidential. This year will mark the 67th anniversary of L.A.’s Bloody Christmas. For those readers that don’t know, Bloody Christmas was the name given to the wrongful arrest and savage beating of 7 civilians at a police party, of which all but 2 were minorities, and all from economically challenged neighborhoods. Tickle-Brained
Foot-Licker!

Shakespeare was pretty much the OR (Original Roaster).
Not only can you use these lists to creatively insult someone, but you can also leave them scratching their head. Plus, since they were inspired by Shakespeare (arguably the greatest English writer and dramatist in history), using these insults is a great way to prove your intelligence and academic prowess! Simply choose one word from Column C. If you’d like to sound even more authentic, try inscribing it inspired by Shakespeare (arguably the greatest English writer and dramatist in history). Ask Sophia

Welcome to Ask Sophia, the Mat-Su Monitor’s regular advice column. If you have a question you’d like to see answered, e-mail it to sophia@matsu.alaska.edu or submit it in the Ask Sophia box in the cafe.

Dear Sophia, I got free birthday coffee today but the wind blew it over and all over my white pants, and now I have no coffee! Oh, the horror! (And I say that earnestly!) I am so sorry that your coffee spilled, but look at it this way: at least you didn’t ruin a good pair of pants and waste five dollars!

Dear Sophia, please reopen the cafe! Please!

Well, hello, Desperate! :D. The last news I heard about the cafe was that all of you hungry college students are in luck! Rumor has it that the cafe is set to open “Monday,” so I am hopeful that by the time that you see this reply you will have a comfortably full stomach from your delicious and reasonably priced cafe fare.

Dear Sophia, I need a job to get experience but everywhere I apply requires experience already. Why? Ahh, what a good question! I can’t give you a definitive answer, but I do have a few tips. First, think about what you’ve already been involved with that gave you useful experience, even if it wasn’t actually a “real” job. For example, have you babysat for neighbors or family friends? Have you volunteered at a nursing home or a soup kitchen? Positions you’ve held in a club or on a sports team may have given you valuable leadership or organizational skills. I’m not encouraging you to lie, but don’t hesitate to talk yourself up! Second, keep applying, even if you don’t have the exact qualifications that the employer is looking for. It never hurts to try, especially if you show a willingness to learn and become a valuable employee.

Dear Sophia, if a zombie bit a vampire would the vampire turn into a zombie or the zombie into a vampire? Well, first of all, I hope that you are using the same amount of mental energy on your classwork as you are on essential monster questions, and secondly, what would you do if you were a zombie? I hope that if you or a loved one was involved in this violent assault, you can find the correct monster health professional to help you through the trying times ahead.

Dear Sophia, I wish someone can wash the microwave plate so it looks cleaner.

You are going to hate this response but I think you are the perfect person for the job! You aren’t the only one that is grossed out by that horrific microwave, but no one else has the guts to anything about it. Just think, you’ll be a hero! They might even frame a picture of you over the newly cleaned appliance and label it “student of the week!” No, but seriously, it is the students responsibility to clean it. I guess we will have to wait until someone gains the courage to clean the thing or clean it ourselves. I just hope that someone does so before the poopers that be decide that there should no longer be a microwave at all!

A Twelfth Night Cryptogram

By Jenifer Breiner

Here is a passage from Shakespeare’s Twelfth Night cleverly converted into code for puzzlers all.

Here’s how it works:

A R C T I C

D R A G O N

is B S D U J E S B H P O

One letter stands for another. In this example the letter B stands for the letter A, Ds stand for C, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, and word length are all clues. The code letters are different for every puzzle.
